KATE HAMILTON

—OR—

THE LITTLE WAIF-BELLE.

BY H. K. SHACKLETON.

No one who has never been an eye witness of the horrors of battle would be able to understand why there are two great armies can have any conception of its terrors. Kate had read of many battle fields, overshadowed by a gloom that was not the gloom of the sickening details of blood and death until the cold coils would creep over her with a shuddering trail. But now as she stood before the scene, she had heard more than words of tongue or pen could ever portray. As shot and shell

"I will remain with my father, Doctor," she replied with a calmness that astonished him.

"But you are fleeing to the hands of enemy, and—"

"But God will take care of me, Doctor," she answered, interrupting him quickly. "I am not afraid."

"I know you are not—you are a true southern woman—but—"

"I am not a southerner," she interrupted, "but I am a Christian. I have been converted."

"And when he is well so glad to accept your kind invitation, I think you will be glad to see him," he said, "and would like so much to see New York again."

"You must hardly know it, I fear, for I have made wonderful changes in a great city. But tell me about yourself, Col. Hamilton. I was so shocked when I saw the news of your imprisonment. Oh, this cruel, cruel war, and trusting into tears she sat the picture of grief."

But any relative in any of the should do so. There is a chance for you to save the army which is falling back, and you—

"I will remain with my father, Doctor," she replied with a calmness that astonished him.

"But you fall into the hands of the enemy."

"But God will take care of me, Doctor," she answered, interrupting him quickly.

"I know you are not—you are a true southern woman—but—"

"I am not," she said, and her face completed. A shill whistled through the side of the house and cut him down at her very feet, and she sprang forward, catching his warm, crimson blood at her feet and dress. With a scream she turned and fled, and he saw her hands and knelt by the side of the cot.

The battle raged hotter and hotter every moment, and now the minnie balls began their shrill whistling around the heads of the soldiers, and the eyes of all the wounded in the building plied, "and when he will be so glad to account for his own actions, I will be at the bottom of my heart. I would like to know just to see New York again."

"You would literally kill me. I fear, for ten years make wonderful changes in a great man," said the doctor.

Hamilton. I was so shocked when I saw your name among the wounded prisoners that I almost fainted. I was staring into tears at the picture of you."

"I have lost any relative in any of the battles," Col. innocently asked.

"Oh, no," said the reply, "but many deaths have occurred among the friends of the army."

"No," said the invalid, "many good and true men have fallen on both sides, but I have not lost any."

"No," said the doctor, "but you will be dead, for the south will never give up as long as she can keep an army in the field."

"You must not go back to the field again," Col. Hamilton," she said, "for we in the north keep the same, but you will be killed."

[illegible][illegible]

"I will keep and save them for you," she said, taking a beautiful young man by the hand and placing him on his pillow. They were almost like boys engaged to the deadly weapons of war. The place they occupied was their dress and pressing the hand of the faithful young soldier said:

"Remember me to your mother, sir, and the next morning was back at her father's side.

The following shots of combat made the scene one of demoralization. The rush of brigades and regiments, the shouting of men on the very earth; still the enemy pressed on, having overcome others in their front. The soldiers were ordered to retreat until the hospital buildings were inside their lines. Suddenly a squad of men came running toward the officer with a drawn sword in hand.

"Why do you remain here?" he asked.

Over the mangled body of Surgeon Livermore.

"Attend to my father," she replied.

"Frank pizen!" exclaimed the wounded soldier on the cot beyond Col. Livermore's head.

"The danger and pistol," "And as steel God bless her!"

"Where I trod and suffered and so many times," "I have come and took me to a house of comfort and solace," replied Kate with spirited animation.

"You are a brave girl," said the doctor and regretted her unfortunate speech the next moment after uttering it. It was too late.

"What is the whistling little street beggar woman she had once repulsed in front of our tent?"

"Forgive me, Kate," she murmured with tears in her eyes, "I did not mean to suppose."

"I have nothing to forgive," and Kate's voice was low and tender, "but suppose we try to support each other. Every body seems to be kind to me."

"That is because you no such decency."

By this time the tide of battle rolled southward from the hospital, and the soldiers of both sides. The wreck was awful to contemplate. Dead, dying, supreme agony, and as scores were brought into the hospital Kate was compelled to view the scenes of carnage. Her heart was so excited and bustling that she could not retreat of the southern army the three miles to the rear. She was, however, was subjected to every petty officer's cant that way. Many of the wounded southern soldiers were taken to the hospital by aid of their officers. An attempt was made to remove Col. Hamilton's cot, but Kate refused to do so.

"Have you command here yet," brutally asked a captain of a Wisconsin regiment.

"I have command of this cot, sir," she boldly replied, her great black eyes staring at him who first touches it does so at his peril!"

"Harden my young friend," said the soldier of my regiment, and tell him the front of the battle."

"I will," she said, "but I should a look of curiosity, which he returned with interest. At that moment a surgeon entered and proceeded to examine the wounded man.

"When will he be able to be moved, doctor?" asked Miss Almonde.

"He will be able to move at this rate he might be able to go in a week or ten days," was the reply.

"I will," she said, "I will nurse him until that time," Kate said, she, turning to Kate.

"Thanks," murmured Kate, "I know you will be able to do more than I can, for we are wiser your people, who are wiser."

The two ladies were unrelenting in their attention to the wounded, but Miss Almonde's mother, towards Col. Hamilton that showed a deeper interest.

was subject to every petty official that came his way. Many of the wounded thought that they were being humiliated by the aid of federal officers. An attempt was made to remove Col. Hamilton's cot, but Kate and the nurse refused to do so. "Have you command here?" brutally asked a captain of a Wisconsin regiment. "I have command of this cot," said Kate, "but I have no command of your soldiers as to his peril!"

Where is your authority, captain?" asked Kate.

"Here, sir!" quickly responded Kate, "the pistol the wounded soldier is holding!"

The officer stepped back several paces, looking as uncomfortable as a scolded child. He then ordered the cot to be moved to the men around it, and several soldiers stepped forward to lay hands on her. "I am not a soldier," she said, "and I will fight with you, like any other soldier, who the others fell for!"

"Cowards—ah!" she cried, "how dare you call me a coward!"

"I will help nurse him until that time," Kate said, turning to Kate.

"Thanks!" murmured Kate, "now you will be able to do more than I can, for we are wiles your people, who are the two ladies' were unpeople, in their attention to the wounded, but, Miss Alameda's manner towards Col. Hamilton that showed a deeper interest than any of the other nurses could have. She watched, listened and thought, but came no nearer solving the problem than she had when she first saw the Alameda would engage the invalid to confidential conversations, with the time spent alone and at last the wounded southerner was able to re-assert his independence. He was grateful to the readiness of his old friend and college mate in New York city. Of course Kate was not a part of the picture of all eyes on account of the the dauntless courage of a truly goddes of war—and never as beautiful as then. Her eyes were as blue as the sky, and, as they attested his admiration of her, and called, "Kate, darling Kate," she said, "What pains," she asked, "will I endure? What will murder you, don't resist her?"

"They are earnest and afraid of a woman," she cried on loud enough to be heard by the other two, "and I am not so. I will be to escape the danger of the possible. I hope to be before they shall move from their present position."

Here the officer, unable to endure the shouts hurled at him advanced towards the woman, and, as he did so, he saw that she had a pistol and fired again, he fell, and his sword-arm above the elbow. "How did you do that?" he yelled, and the woman staggered back half a yard from the floor, just as then the officer who crossed the entrance, "Kate, have a good cry of relief and smiled to him. She told her story.

Here the officer, unable to endure the taunts hurled at him advanced towards his prisoner with drawn sword. She quickly raised her pistol and fired again, knocking his sword-arm above the elbow. His muttered a yell of rage and dropping his lance, fled then the officer who first entered. Kate gave a glad cry of relief and called to him. She told her story in a few words, and a vanguard captain was ordered under arrest and Kate was no more troubled by him.

But at the last session this subject was not discussed, and Mr. Black seeks to remedy the matter this morning, a very judicious and appropriate action, regardless of anybody's opinions. Mr. Harrison—Does not equity and good sense demand that the amount be refunded to the artist who has paid for the bonds?

Mr. Turnbull—Most undoubtedly not. This is a case of a man who has been taken in by the artist, and the artist is not to be paid for the bonds.

Ammoniated Super Phosphate
CONTAINS BY ANALYSIS 12 per cent. available Phosphoric Acid, 12 per cent. available Bone Phosphate, 12 per cent. Potash Salts.
The above fertilizer is the highest standard made and sold in this country, as is shown by analysis above, made by the best Chemists now living.
The Phosphate of lime in this compound is from animal bone, not rock phosphate, and is therefore more valuable, being taken up and assimilated more readily by the roots of the plants. It is dry, fine, and light, containing much less moisture than is usually found in commercial manures. It is chosen by other fertilizers which cost less per ton, because it contains more valuable material to the pound, and will go on more ground.
400 tests made last season, and testimonials of the highest character can be shown.
100 tons will arrive next week.
